EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Short-term rentals within dwellings have increased in popularity in recent years. The growth of this emerging accommodations industry has been accompanied by a growing interest in many communities to review the extent to which short-term rental activities should be regulated.

The Public Service was directed to report back on recommendations for regulating short-term rentals in Winnipeg. This interim report provides an overview of work done to date, including the findings of jurisdictional research and best practices, and outlines next steps, including exploring a taxation and licensing framework that considers land use and other requirements.

Research on the short-term rentals industry shows that a variety of regulatory tools are relied upon, with the approach taken by a municipality being closely tied to the specific issues that each municipality is looking to address. To assist in identifying the best way to approach potential regulations for the industry in Winnipeg, the Public Service intends to carry out in-depth public engagement and stakeholder consultation to gather input on the experience with short-term rentals, on the nature and scope of associated concerns and opportunities, and on potential regulatory solutions.

The Public Service has had preliminary discussions with various stakeholders, including AirBnb, the Manitoba Hotel Association and the Manitoba chapter of the Canadian Condominium Institute.

The Public Service will consider stakeholder and public feedback as well as best practices and trends in the short-term rental industry to find a simple and direct solution that responds to the Winnipeg situation.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That this interim update on the findings of preliminary jurisdictional research and the next steps to develop and assess options for regulating short-term rentals in Winnipeg be received as information.
2. That the Office of Public Engagement be directed to solicit feedback from the general public, stakeholders, and elected officials on their experiences with short-term rentals, on the nature and scope of associated concerns and opportunities, and on potential regulatory solutions, and that the public engagement be funded from existing resources within Planning, Property, and Development.
3. That the Public Service explore a taxation and licensing regime for short-term rentals that considers land use and other requirements, and report back in 180 days on regulatory options and recommendations, including any associated staffing, resource, and cost implications.
4. That the proper Officers of the City of Winnipeg be authorized to do all things necessary to implement the intent of the foregoing.

REASON FOR THE REPORT

At its meeting on October 13, 2021, the Standing Policy Committee on Property and Development, Heritage and Downtown Development:

1. Granted an extension of time of up to 180 days for the Winnipeg Public Service to report back on the following:
 - A. Recommendations for regulating short-term rentals, including, but not limited to, fire and safety, land-use, and licensing requirements.
 - B. A review of the Accommodation Tax By-law No. 70/2008, which includes the following:
 - i. Amendments required in order to include short-term rental properties in the collection and remittance of the Accommodations Tax;
 - ii. A summary of the current regulatory situation of the short-term rental industry in the City of Winnipeg as well as other as a cross-jurisdictional scan;
 - iii. Recommendations to regulate the Industry while recognizing the importance and increasing popularity of the short-term rental market and its ability to attract visitors to Winnipeg through an expansive marketing network;
 - iv. Cost estimates including staffing and additional resources for implementation of enforcement policies.
2. Directed the Winnipeg Public Service to engage stakeholders, including Members of Council, throughout the process.

This report to Council is in accordance with Section 4 of the Engage Winnipeg Policy.

IMPLICATIONS OF THE RECOMMENDATIONS

The Public Service will be carrying out more in-depth public engagement and stakeholder consultation in order to develop and assess options and prepare recommendations on proposed regulations for the short-term rental industry in Winnipeg. The engagement strategy contains an expenditure of approximately $4,000 to participate in an omnibus survey.

HISTORY/DISCUSSION

Overview

The term “short-term rental” typically refers to situations where all or part of a dwelling unit is being rented out by a ‘host’ for a short number of consecutive days (usually less than 30 days) in exchange for payment. The dwelling unit may be located in a variety of building types (e.g., single-family dwelling, row housing, apartment, etc.). Associated with this activity, online platforms are available to help ‘hosts’ to advertise and manage the short-term rental process (e.g., booking, payment, communications, etc.).

Short-term rentals within dwellings have increased in popularity, as a result of factors such as increased online marketing, the potential for rental income (up to three times the revenue of a traditional rental¹), and customer interest in wider accommodation options.

With the growth of this emerging accommodations industry, has come the interest in many communities to review the extent to which short-term rental activities should be regulated.

Questions and concerns that prompted such consideration have included:

- Fire and building safety,
- Potential impacts at the neighbourhood scale, particularly if a dwelling is rented out on a continual basis and/or if the short-term rental is not managed adequately,
- Potential impacts at the community level, including regular rental stock vacancy rates and the availability of affordable housing, and
- The fairness of existing accommodations tax regulations that do not include short-term rental businesses.

At the same time, municipalities have recognized the inherent value and benefits of short-term rentals, both to hosts (e.g., income) as well as to the community (e.g., marketing a community’s diverse neighbourhoods and offerings).

Best practice responses at the municipal level have focused on understanding the dynamics of short-term rentals with each local context and addressing issues as simply and directly as possible with the use of regulatory tools, rather than banning this form of activity.

Jurisdictional Scan Findings

Appendix 1 provides jurisdictional scan findings with respect to both how municipalities have assessed the nature of the issues of short-term rentals in their community as well as how they approached addressing those concerns through a regulatory framework.

In summary:

1. In order to understand the nature and extent to which short-term rentals are impacting the local community (positively and negatively):
 - Many cities have relied on citizen engagement and stakeholder consultation to better understand dynamics at the neighbourhood and community level and specific stakeholder concerns, including concerns regarding existing accommodations industry taxation frameworks, and
 - Some municipalities have attempted to quantify the number of short-term rentals in their community (which can be challenging).
2. Communities have different housing and tourism markets and accommodations pressures that shape the types of responses received from citizens and stakeholders from individual municipalities. Notwithstanding, most communities who have put in place regulations for short-term rentals have done so to address neighbourhood livability issues, rental housing supply/affordability concerns, and/or accommodations industry concerns regarding fair taxation.
3. With respect to the types of regulatory tools being used in other jurisdictions to address localized issues and concerns:
 - A variety of regulatory tools are relied upon, given the varied nature of concerns. The specific approach of a municipality is closely tied to the specific issues that each municipality is looking to address.
 - None of the cities approached regulation through only one tool (e.g., registration or licensing, zoning, imposing a tax or levy).
 - A common approach used by municipalities is to only permit short-term rentals at a person's primary residence.
 - Examples of other regulatory solutions include:
 - limiting short-term rental activity to certain areas within a municipality,
 - limiting the number of short-term rental properties that an individual operates,
 - setting limits on the amount of days that a dwelling is used as a short-term rental or the number of rooms that can be used,
 - requirements for sufficient parking and onsite garbage disposal,
 - noise ordinances and other local regulations posted publicly on-site for visitors to see,
 - declarations for fire/safety systems,
 - identifying a local contact person who can respond to complaints and inquiries in real time, and
 - customized rules for non-hosted rentals (where the homeowner or apartment renter is not on-site)
 - Voluntary compliance with short-term rental regulations is cited to be low (10-15%)². Enforcement strategies are considered to be a necessary component to an overall regulatory framework. Most municipalities regulating short-term rentals require a form of registration or licensing in order to ensure ongoing compliance with municipal regulations. Common approaches/best practice to licensing and enforcement include components such as:

- annual renewals,
- registration/licensing fee,
- license/registration number required to be posted within online advertisements/listings,
- clear definition/interpretation of rules (e.g., 'if you advertise, you are operating'),
- simple and easy-to-navigate registration/licensing processes (online/mobile friendly),
- ability to license/register against each unit separately (if allowed to operate more than one short-term rental),
- regular monitoring of online listings (rather than carrying out an annual review) and ability to document non-compliance (e.g., screenshots of offending listings),
- easy ways for complaints to be reported,
- addressing violations quickly,
- fairness in enforcement approaches (e.g., treat repeat violations differently from first-time offenders, ensure that the rules are clear and understood).

A key consideration in establishing a registration/licensing program is resources and costs associated with a program.

- It is common for municipalities regulating short-term rentals to impose a tax or levy on this type of accommodation.

Current Regulatory Situation for Short-Term Rentals in Winnipeg

1. Building Safety

Property owners are required to meet applicable fire and building code provisions.

2. Land Use & Neighbourhood Livability

From a land use or zoning by-law perspective, the City of Winnipeg does not currently define or regulate 'short-term rentals', as described in this report. Zoning regulations do currently address 'Bed & Breakfast' situations.

Should there be a desire to regulate additional types of short-term rental situations (e.g., create a broader definition of 'short-term rental' tied to specific operational requirements), amendments to the City's zoning by-laws would be required.

The City's Neighbourhood Livability By-law currently regulates a variety of neighbourhood nuisance-related issues, including noise. The By-law does provide the City with nuisance sections that address noise and other nuisance issues; however, it would not address adequately citizen expectations if complaints are occurring on a regular basis. Zoning use laws and licensing schemes tend to provide greater authority to address ongoing operational issues which impact the surrounding community.

The City of Winnipeg does not currently license short-term rentals. Creating either a registration or licensing program for short-term rentals would require amendments to the Community Safety Business Licensing By-law (formerly the Doing Business in Winnipeg By-law).

3. Accommodations Taxation and the Destination Marketing Reserve Fund

The City's Accommodation Tax By-law No. 70/2008 (By-law) places a 5% tax on room accommodations within Winnipeg with the revenue being recorded in the Destination Marketing Reserve Fund. This Fund supports organizations, projects and special events that encourage tourists to visit Winnipeg. The total accommodation tax revenue generated by hotel stays in 2019 was $10.0 million. 2020 and 2021 revenues were significantly reduced due to COVID-19 impacts to the industry.

There are approximately 125 hotels operating within the City of Winnipeg however not all hotels bill and collect the accommodation tax based on exemptions listed under subsection 3(3) of the By-law.

The By-law at the time of adoption (2008) did not consider on-line platforms. It is estimated that there are approximately 700 operators in Winnipeg that are currently using online platforms that currently do not collect or remit the accommodation tax. Based on the number of operators it is estimated that the accommodation tax that is not being realized based on the current accommodation tax rate of 5% is $150,000. This would represent operators such as bed and breakfast and residential property owners.

Issues & Opportunities

At this point in the Public Service's review of issues and opportunities related to short-term rentals, it is understood that members of Council have received feedback from residents regarding the impact of short-term rentals at the neighbourhood level. Issues raised related to fire and building safety, noise, parking, garbage, and personal safety concerns. There is a sense that short-term rentals have become a greater issue at the neighbourhood level, particularly over the past few years.

From a housing supply and affordability perspective, it is unclear to what extent short-term rentals are currently impacting the city's rental housing market. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC) 2021 Rental Market Report (January 2021 release) indicate an overall vacancy rate increase to 3.8% in Winnipeg in 2020, due in part to the recent construction of rental units, coupled with reduced overall demand for rental units as a result of the pandemic. Rental demand remains high for affordable units, while newer units (associated with higher monthly rents) are associated with higher vacancy rates. Within this market context, short-term rentals may be seen as a potential alternative in lieu of more permanent rental arrangements.

Over the past few years, stakeholders in the tourism and hotel industry have expressed an interest in regulations that would ensure that short-term rental properties are included in the collection and remittance of the accommodation tax.

In the preparation of this report, the Public Service has had preliminary discussions with stakeholders from the short-term rental and hotel industries. The hotel industry stakeholder supports regulations for this evolving industry, and establishing more equity among those operating in the accommodations market. The short-term rental platform consulted with understands that regulation may be necessary, and cites the need for a sensible and fair approach.

Further engagement is needed to more fully understand the nature and extent of the issues and opportunities within this market, and the perspectives of a broad range of stakeholders.

Next Steps

In order to identify the best manner in which to approach potential regulations for the short-term rental industry, the Public Service intends to carry out more in-depth public and stakeholder consultation. This consultation will gather input on the public's experience with short-term rentals to further identify the scope and quantify the extent of associated concerns; to discuss the benefits and opportunities within this accommodations industry; and to consider potential regulatory solutions. Engagement opportunities may include a public survey, participation in an omnibus survey, a project webpage, and stakeholder workshops.

Input gathered through public and stakeholder engagement will inform the Public Service's subsequent report back to the Committee, which will include:

- a summary of the feedback received from engagement activities,
- recommendations for regulating short-term rentals, including, but not limited to, fire and safety, land-use, and licensing requirements, as appropriate,
- by-law amendments required in order to include short-term rental properties in the collection and remittance of the Accommodations Tax, and
- cost estimates including staffing and additional resources required for the implementation of the recommendations.

The Public Service will consider engagement input and best practices and trends in the short-term rental industry to find a simple and direct solution that responds to the Winnipeg situation for Council's consideration.
